COLDEST DAY IN THIRTEEN YEARS

Official Weather Records Show that Fourteen Years ago Thermometer Registered Lower than Sunday. Severe Weather.

With thermometers—more interesting than accurate—registering anywhere from fifteen to forty eight degrees below zero in different portions of the county, Colonel E. B. Cope's official government indicator denoted a minimum figure of twenty below Sunday morning thus establishing 1912 as the next to the coldest year since an official record has been kept in Gettysburg. The year 1899 went a little lower giving a temperature of twenty six below but that was the only record ahead of Sunday.

And how the people did shiver, and compare notes on their thermometers! At various places in town the figures differed as much as eighteen degrees while greater discrepancies were reported from sections of the county. Arendtsville reported fifteen below while Knoxlyn gave its temperature as forty eight below.

As early as four o'clock Sunday morning the first calls were sent for the town plumbers to get to work on frozen pipes and from that on until late in the afternoon people clamored for aid of this kind. All the plumbers in town, with their assistants, were kept busy and many people, unable to get skilled labor, became plumbers themselves for the time being. There was a general freeze-up in homes where people did not realize Saturday evening just how rapidly the temperature was falling.

Numerous frosted ears, fingers, and feet are reported while several trees in town are said to have been split for several feet from the ground by the extreme cold.

Telegraph and telephone wires snapped at some places and, though the county connections were little interfered with, there was much trouble in long distance calls. The churches were gotten comfortable for the various services and the attendance was good in spite of the cold weather.

Colonel Cope reports the following as the lowest temperatures recorded for the past fourteen years:

1899	26 below
1900	zero
1901	2 above
1902	2 below
1903	4 below
1904	12 below
1905	5 below
1906	1 above
1907	9 below
1908	5 below
1909	1 above
1910	1 above
1911	2 above

The official record for the past week is as follows:

January 8	3 below
January 9	9 above
January 10	6 above
January 11	4 above
January 12	10 above
January 13	13 below
January 14	20 below
January 15	7 above

ROAD FROM HERE TO PITTSBURGH

Surveyors to be Sent out on Old Highway from West to East. Pittsburgh and Gettysburg the Terminals.

A complete survey of what is known as the old "Southern road" extending from Pittsburgh to Gettysburg, laid out in colonial times and until the time of the railroads the great highway between Philadelphia and the western part of the state has been ordered by State Highway Commissioner E. M. Bigelow and the first day weather permits surveyors will begin work.

This survey will be preliminary to improvement of what is destined to be one of the great highways of the state's system of main roads and it is likely that some of the contracts for work will be let during the coming spring and summer.

Commissioner Bigelow made a number of inspections of this famous highway and last fall found the section in the vicinity of Ligonier in such bad condition that he immediately put a force of men to work on it. One corps of engineers will work east from Gettysburg to Bedford and another will come from Bedford to Gettysburg. At Gettysburg it is intended to have the highway connect with roads to be built to Philadelphia, Baltimore and Harrisburg.

The old southern road runs through Greensburg, Ligonier, Stoyestown, Bedford, McConnellsburg, Chambersburg and Gettysburg. It was one of two great roads laid out through the state, the northern road running from Pittsburgh, through Westmoreland, South Indiana, Northern Cambria, Elmer and Centre counties to the Susquehanna.

The survey will place the commissioner in possession of complete data regarding the highway whose possibilities have become apparent since the automobile came into general use and which traverses one of the richest agricultural regions of the Commonwealth.

TWO HURT AT COPPER MINE

Molten Slag on Two Bulgarian Laborers Caused Serious and Painful Wounds though Recovery of Both is Anticipated.

Two Bulgarians employed at the Eagle copper mines at Charnia, were seriously burned Saturday afternoon by the explosion of hot slag.

The men were engaged in pouring the slag from one vessel to another when some of the hot metal fell on the snow. The metal coming in contact with the snow caused a gas formation which exploded and the two men were covered with the molten mass.

They were quickly given medical assistance at the office of the company and later they were taken to Hagers-town on the evening train. The ambulance met the train and the men were taken to the hospital.

The one named Diminoff was the more seriously hurt. He is rather seriously burned about the body. The other man named Marnott, is burned about the arms and hands.

Both men are resting well and should no complications arise it is stated they will recover.

ORRTANNA

Orrtanna, January 15—M. F. Stoner has returned home after spending ten days with his father and friends in York.

Samuel Baltzley and Edward Stransbaugh purchased new engines recently, the former a 6 horse power gasoline and the latter a steam traction 18 horse power.

Linn and Biggs, and Keady and son the past week have harvested some fine ice, both filling their ice houses to the roof. Ice this year will certainly not be a scarcity when the thermometer registered below zero for a week.

We have been hearing lately some old people saying the mercury has not been down like this for many, many years. One in particular says it has not registered as low in 55 years.

Surveyors have been here the past week for a new side track which will make this place a regular passing point.

Oliver Bushey and William Heintzman are reported on the sick list.

MANY TEACHERS ATTEND MEETING

Half a Hundred Adams County Teachers Braved Wintry Blasts and Attended Institute at Fairfield. The Meetings.

Adams County's public school teachers saw no terrors in the snow and cold of Saturday and fifty of their number turned out for the second institute of the year which was held at Fairfield.

As a sort of preliminary to the institute a meeting was held Friday evening in the High School building at Fairfield for patrons and friends of the schools. The scholars furnished the music of the evening and there were two addresses, one by Prof. A. C. Rothmel, of Kutztown, on "The Rights and Duties of the Child," and another by Rev. Prof. C. F. Sanders, of Gettysburg, on "The Social Value of Education." The session was largely attended.

Saturday morning the opening of the meeting was delayed by the cold and the fact that the morning train was about an hour late. As a result there was but one address, Prof. Rothmel speaking on "Imitation." The teachers were in attendance but not many patrons appeared for this session.

In the afternoon, however, a goodly number were again present and the room was well filled. Prof. Rothmel's subject was "Interest" and Prof. Sanders' "Invention." Adjournment was made in time for the teachers to get the afternoon trains home.

Dinner was served at noon to the teachers by residents of Fairfield and before adjournment a resolution was adopted thanking the people of the town for their hospitality.

GAME REPORT

Gettysburg and Adams County hunters will be interested in the annual report of the State Game Commissioners just announced.

Hearty endorsement of the proposition for a uniform open season for certain game animals and birds and a warning against the danger to the public in the use of high powered rifles by the comparatively small number of persons who go hunting are features of the report. The report covers many subjects interesting to lovers of hunting and considerable pride is taken in the statement that, thanks to the laws to which the commission has devoted itself, game of all kinds is increasing.

The increase of insectivorous birds is declared to be especially notable because of the protection dwellers in the country are giving to them and to the general interest in the game laws displayed by residents of the cities. The insect eating birds are declared to be worth hundreds of thousands of dollars annually to the farmers.

The report says in part:

"The increase of game birds beyond that of last year is evident in many sections of the Commonwealth, quail being more plentiful in Western Pennsylvania than for many years; this increase of quail being in evidence in most of the counties of the Commonwealth, excepting the northern tier, and a limited number of counties in the southeastern part of the state, where, because of close cultivation, it is impossible for these birds to exist at all.

"More ruffed grouse have been seen during the past summer and fall, and more have been killed in the state during the open season just past, than has been the case for five or more years.

"The reports of wild turkeys have been exceedingly flattering, and we believe there are more wild turkeys in the state today than there have for many years.

"There is no doubt whatever about the very decided increase of deer and bear. More deer have been seen in the state than for twenty five or more years, and while perhaps no more deer were killed, because of the law prohibiting the killing of any deer excepting a male deer with horns visible above the hair, this same provision has saved the lives of many does and small deer, that otherwise would have been slaughtered.

"While the drafting of the act of June 1, 1911, making a uniform open season for certain game animals and birds, did not originate with the Game Commission, we heartily endorse its provision in the main, for several reasons:

"That the weather is more seasonable for hunting; that game of all kinds is better able to take care of itself on the first of November than it could do upon Oct. 15; that the game is more mature and of better quality than it would be earlier in the season; that the majority of our song and insectivorous birds are gone to their winter homes by the first of November, and are not liable to be killed as they might be in October; that because of possible rains or snows the danger of possible forest fires has been reduced to the minimum; we consider the open season for game birds, as fixed by the last Legislature, at six weeks, to be at least two weeks longer than it should be."

SIX KILLED AT CROSSING

Pennsylvania Express Runs
Down Wagon.

VICTIMS ON WAY TO CHURCH

Five Women and Driver Comprised the Party, and All of Them Met Death.

Philadelphia, Jan. 15.—Because the grade crossing over the Pennsylvania railroad at Linden avenue, Torresdale, was unprotected, five persons were dashed to instant death and another died without regaining consciousness a few minutes later.

The dead were in a dept wagon, on their way to early mass, when an express train going sixty miles an hour struck the team. The sextette consisted of five women employed as servants by two Torresdale families and the driver of the wagon.

The dead are: Charles Davidson, fifty years old, driver; Nellie O'Connor, nineteen years old; Rose Gallagher, eighteen years old; Mary Roddy, aged twenty years; Bridget Malloy, forty-two years old, and Agnes Garrity, aged twenty-two years.

For two years it has been Davidson's custom to drive the five girls to early mass at St. Dominic's church, near Holmesburg. He reported at the Masses and Biddle homes, where the girls were employed, as usual, with the depot wagon. The cold was bitter, and the five young women huddled together in the closed vehicle, leaving everything to the driver.

Davidson, too, was well bundled up and had his collar turned up about his ears. As the team approached the crossing a freight train was passing, and Davidson waited for it to get by. Bundled up as he was, and with the freight train before him, he failed to see the express come thundering along. When the freight had passed Davidson started across and drove directly in front of the express. In an instant the flyer struck the team, and the debris and bodies were scattered along the road for seventy-five yards.

Engineer F. L. Bradbury reversed his engine and threw on the brakes, bringing the train to a standstill as quickly as possible. The six bodies were picked up and placed in the baggage car and the train backed to Pearson, an abandoned station near the scene of the accident, where it left three of the women. Thinking that the other two and the man might still be living, they were taken in the train half a mile further on to Torresdale station, where Dr. John Bacon pronounced two of them dead. Agnes Garrity was still breathing faintly, but was unconscious and died in a few minutes.

Strange to say, the horse escaped unhurt, and as soon as he felt the wagon wrenched from him he dashed away and after a run of two miles was captured.

Several of the girls were so badly mangled that recognition was impossible. Identification was made by their clothing.

TREE HELPS SAVE FAMILY

Man Rescues Wife and Two Children as Home Burns.

Orange, N. J., Jan. 15.—A leap by Edward J. McCoy into the icy branches of a tree which grew close to his window saved him from death or serious injury and was the means of saving his wife and two children when his $15,000 dwelling was burned.

Escape by the staircase was cut off when the crackling flames awakened the family. McCoy leaped from an upper window to the tree and clung to its close-swinging branches. One child was passed to him and he slid safely to the ground with the infant. He caught the other child, which was thrown to him from the window.

Then he helped his wife gain the tree's branches. Their domestic, Mary Frank, leaped from the window and broke her leg.

Countess of Warwick to Lecture Here.

London, Jan. 15.—The Countess of Warwick is considering three offers, one of which she probably will accept, to make a lecture tour in America. The proposition is that she shall deliver a series of forty lectures in the biggest cities of the United States and Canada. She has prepared several subjects, one of which deals with celebrities she has met, but her pet subjects will be communism, of which she is an ardent adherent, and woman's suffrage.

Judge Paddles Boy Vagrants.

Utica, N. Y., Jan. 15.—Theodore Wenzel and Chester Price, each sixteen years old, were publicly paddled in the city court by Judge J. K. O'Connor, when they pleaded guilty to the charge of vagrancy. The judge used a paddle fashioned by his own hand from a stout piece of wood.

Overcome on Way Home.

York, Pa., Jan. 15.—Henry Peterman, forty-three years old and single, was found dead near the old railroad bridge. He started to go to his home late at night and was overcome by the cold weather.

RICHESON MUST DIE IN CHAIR

Governor Foss Will Not Commute Death Sentence.

Boston, Jan. 15.—Governor Eugene N. Foss intimated in a statement he directed his secretary, Dudley M. Holman, to issue that he would not recommend the commutation to life imprisonment of the sentence of death imposed on Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson, the confessed murderer of Miss Avis Linnell.

The governor, it is said, has been carefully watching the development of public opinion, and has come to the conclusion he should not interfere with the carrying out of the law's penalty during the week of May 19. The statement of Mr. Holman reads:

"The governor personally does not believe in capital punishment; nevertheless the death sentence is imposed by the courts of the commonwealth in conformity with the law. Such being the case, Governor Foss has never sought to go beyond the clearly defined duty of his office, and he directs me to state that under no conditions whatsoever will he either seek to or exercise the power vested in him or evade the responsibility fixed upon him by the constitution and statutes of the commonwealth."

"I do not believe," said W. A. Morse, Richeson's counsel, when he had read the statement, "that this settles the case. I am satisfied that the governor will do what is right after all the facts have been presented to him."

SWINDLED THE POPE

Posed as Priest and Defrauded Clergy and Royalty Out of $200,000.

Rome, Jan. 15.—Giovanni Battista Gindri, a pseudo Roman Catholic priest, was arrested here on a charge of extensive swindling.

He confessed to the police that he had swindled the pope, many cardinals and religious orders and royal personages out of a million francs, or about $200,000.

Gindri not only pretended to be a priest, but celebrated mass regularly. He is wanted in several countries, particularly in France, Germany and Austria, where he pretended to be an emissary of the pope and swindled the Roman Catholic clergy and many diplomats.

MINERS OFF TO CONVENTION

Anthracite Delegates to Back Up Mitchell.

POSSIBILITIES OF A STRIKE

Mine Workers, Operators and Business Men Talking Over Probable Trouble After March 31.

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Jan. 15.—Eager to take up the fight which John Mitchell, former president of the union, is expected to make at the coming meeting of anthracite workers, officers and delegates of the mine workers' union left here for Indianapolis to attend the convention Wednesday.

A year ago at this convention a resolution was passed compelling John Mitchell to either resign from the National Civic Federation or from the mine workers' union.

Mitchell left the Federation, giving up the salary of $8000 a year which he was paid. Since then his friends have claimed that the convention was packed by the Socialist element of the union, which Mitchell has always opposed, in a effort to humiliate him.

Mitchell is expected to make a vigorous effort to have the resolution rescinded.

Last week President William H. Truesdale, of the Lackawanna railroad, admitted while he was visiting Scranton that the coal operators had received the new demands of the mine workers from their leaders. And on March 31 the anthracite board of conciliation, which came into existence in 1903 after the big strike of 1902, and which has been settling questions of dispute between operator and employee for almost nine years, will cease to exist unless miners and operators agree in a meeting already arranged to continue it.

Wherefore the anthracite regions are talking over the probabilities of a strike after March 31.

Not only wealthy coal men, but the miners' butcher and baker and candlestickmaker had something of a shock when it became known that one of the chief demands of the miners is that the board of conciliation be abolished on March 31.

Every operator who has been seen believes in the board, which so far has settled satisfactorily more than 200 grievances. Miners who were stopped in the suburbs while coming from their work say they personally should like to see the conciliation board continued.

The miners thus approached gave as their reasons the same arguments advanced by the operators, the chief of which is that the board is made up of three operators and three mine workers, and that if there is a deadlock on a decision the question is put up to Charles P. Neill, chief of the bureau of labor at Washington, who then as umpire makes a decision that is final.

In the company houses, where many of the miners live, their wives and daughters agree with you that the board should go on settling disputes. Settling disputes in the board's way means—has meant for about nine years—the absence of long strikes, stagnation in other business, hunger and sometimes murder, loss of revenue to the mining companies, loss of property through violence, loss of wages to the miner, and at last the word over the grocery counters that the miner's family have no more credit.

BLASTS OFF HIS CHILBLAINS

Man Finds "Powder Smoke Cure" Effective and Life is Saved.

Sterling, Ill., Jan. 15.—A sudden transformation from chilblains to blisters was the painful spectacular experience of R. G. Hulett, of Morrison, Ill.

Hulett had been urged by friends to steep his feet in gunpowder smoke to assuage the painful sores, and, pouring the explosive into a basin, he placed it in front of the chair on which he sat and flicked a lighted match into its midst.

Little puff of smoke—Good night. When the neighbors arrived they found Hulett badly burned and the room wrecked and beginning to blaze merrily.

It was explained to Hulett after his wounds had been dressed that he should have poured the gunpowder into hot water instead of lighting it. "Well, I got rid of those blasted chilblains, anyway," replied Hulett, with a rueful smile.

Five Rich Farmers in Senate.

Washington, Jan. 15.—When Obadiah Gardner, of Maine, entered the senate last week he became the fifth self-declared farmer in that body. He announced it in his autobiography, and so became a classmate, as it were, of Senators Dupont, of Delaware; Martine, of New Jersey; Gronna, of North Dakota, and Smith, of South Carolina, the only confessed farmers now belonging to the Millionaires' club.

THE GIRL from HIS TOWN

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Dan Blair, the 22-year-old son of the fifty-million-dollar copper king of Blairtown, Mont., is a guest at the English home of Lady Galorey. Dan's father had been courteous to Lord Galorey during his visit to the United States and the courtesy is now being returned to the young man. The youth has an ideal girl in his mind whom he some day hopes to find.

CHAPTER II.—Dan meets Lily, Duchess of Breakwater, a beautiful widow, who is attracted by his immense fortune and takes a liking to her.

CHAPTER III.—Back at Blairtown, when Dan was a boy, a girl with golden hair, in a white dress trimmed with blue, sang a solo at a church. He had never forgotten her, although she never again appeared in Blairtown.

CHAPTER IV.—The Galoreys, Lily and Dan take a box at a London theater where one Letty Lane is the star. Dan recognizes her as the girl from his town who sang so sweetly. Going behind the scenes he introduces himself to her and she remembers him.

CHAPTER V.—He learns that Prince Poniatowsky, whom he has met in the Galorey set, is a suitor and escort to Letty. He sees them in a cafe and the singer gives him a bright smile of loyal fellowship.

CHAPTER VI.—Lord Galorey finds that his wife is borrowing money to a large amount from the good-hearted Dan and that Letty is setting her cap to trap his millions. He and a friend named Ruggles determine to protect the westerner from fortune hunters.

CHAPTER VII.—Ruggles finds that Dan attends every performance at the theater, spellbound by the beautiful singing of Letty Lane. He also finds that the singer has many friends among London's poor whom she charitably helps.

CHAPTER VIII.—Young Blair goes to see Lily. Her talk of nothing but Letty and this angers the Duchess. She asks the Duchess to invite Letty to sing in society and help her out of the theatrical rut, but she refuses.

CHAPTER IX.—The westerner again behind the scenes finds Letty growing ill from hard work. She faints and alarms him, but when she recovers and goes through her act successfully.

CHAPTER X.—Dan locates the woman with whom Letty lives, and going there finds her ill. She recovers, and Dan sees her later in the company of Poniatowsky. He dislikes the man, Ruggles and Dan invite Letty to supper.

CHAPTER XI.

Ruggles Gives a Dinner.

The bright tide of worldly London flows after and around midnight into the various restaurants and supper rooms, and as well through the corridors and halls of the Carlton. At one of the small tables bearing a great expensive bunch of orchids and soft ferns, Josh Ruggles, in a new evening dress, sat waiting for his party. Dan had dined with Lord Galorey, and the two men had gone out together afterward, and Ruggles had not seen the boy to give him Letty Lane's note.

"Got it with you?" Blair asked when he came in, and Ruggles responded that he didn't carry love letters around in his dress clothes.

They could tell by the interest in the room when the actress was coming, and both men rose as Letty Lane floated in at flood tide with a crowd of last arrivals.

She was not dressed this evening with the intention that her dark simplicity of attire should be conspicuous. The cloak which Dan took from her shed the perfume of orris and revealed the woman in a blaze of sparkling paillettes. She seemed made out of sparkle, and her blond head, from which a bright ornament shook, was the most brilliant thing about her, though her dress from hem to throat glistened with discs of gold like moonshine on a starry sea. The actress' look of surprise when she saw Ruggles indicated that she had not expected a boy of his age.

"The other boy?" she asked. "Well, this is the nicest supper party ever! And you are awfully good to invite me."

Ruggles patted his shirt front and adjusted his cravat.

"My idea," he told her, "all the blame on me, Miss Lane. Charge it up to me! Dan here had cold feet from the first. He said you wouldn't come."

She laughed deliciously.

"He did? Hasn't much faith, has he?"

Miss Lane drew her long gloves off, touched the orchids with her little hands, on which the ever present rings flashed, and went on talking to Ruggles, to whom she seemed to want to address her conversation.

"I'm simply crazy over these flowers."

The older man showed his pleasure. "My choice again! Waked up myself and chose the bunch, blame me again; ditto dinner; mine from start to finish—hope you'll like it. I would have added some Montana peas and some chocolate soda water, only I thought you might not understand the joke."

Miss Lane beamed on him. Although he was unconscious of it, she was not fully at ease; he was not the kind of man she had expected to see. Accustomed to young fellows like the boy and their mad devotion, accustomed to men with whom she could be herself, the big, bluff, middle-aged gentleman with his painfully correct tie, his rumpled iron-gray hair, and his deference to her, through an unusual diversion, was a little embarrassing.

"Oh, I know your dinner is ripping. Mr. Ruggles, I'm on a diet of milk and eggs myself, and I expect your order didn't take in those." But at his fallen countenance she hurried to say "Oh, I wouldn't have told you that if I hadn't been intruding to break through.

And with childlike anticipation she clapped her hands and said: "We're going to have lots of fun! Just think, they don't know what that means here in London. They say 'heaps of sport, you know.' It's just we Americans who know what 'lots of fun' is, isn't it?"

Near her Dan Blair's young eyes were drinking in the spectacle of delicate beauty beautifully gowned, of soft skin, glorious hair, and he gazed like a child at a pantomime. Under his breath he exclaimed now, with effusion, "You bet your life we are going to have lots of fun!" And turning to him, Miss Lane said:

"Six chocolate sodas running?"

"Oh, don't," he begged, "not that kind of fun."

She shook with laughter.

"Are you from Blairtown, Mr. Ruggles? I don't think I ever saw you there."

And the westerner returned: "Well, from what Dan tells me, you're not much of a fixture yourself, Miss Lane. You were just about born and then kidnapped."

Her gay expression faded. And she repeated his word, "Kidnaped? That's a good word for it, Mr. Ruggles."

She picked up between her fingers a strand of the green fern, and looked at its delicate tracery as it lay on the palm of her hand.

"I sang one day at a missionary sermon in the Presbyterian Church."

She interrupted herself with a short laugh. "But I guess you're not thinking of writing my biography, are you?"

And it was Dan's voice that urged her. "Say, do go on. I was there that day with my father, and you sang simply out of sight."

"Yes," she accepted, "out of sight of Blairtown and everybody I ever knew. I went away the next day." She lifted her glass of champagne to her lips. "Here's one thing I oughtn't to do," she said, "but I'm going to just the same. I'm going to do everything I want this evening. Remember, I let you drink six glasses of chocolate soda once." She drained her glass and her friends drank with her. "I like this soup awfully. What is it?"—just touching it with her spoon.

"Why," Ruggles hastened to tell her, "it ain't a party soup, it's Scotch broth. But somehow it sounded good on the bill of fare. I fixed the rest of the dinner up for you and Dan, but I let myself go on the soup, it's my favorite."

She did not eat it, however, although she said it was splendid and that she was crazy about it.

"Did you come East then?" Dan returned to what she had been saying.

"Yes, that week; went to Paris and all over the place."

She instantly fell into a sort of melancholy. It was easy to be seen that she did not want to talk about her past and yet that it fascinated her.

"Just think of it!" he exclaimed.

"I never heard a word about you until I heard you sing the other night."

The actress laughed and told him that he had made up for lost time, and that he was a regular "stutter" now at the Galorey.

Ruggles said, "He took me every night to see you dance until I balked, Miss Lane."

"Still, it's a perfectly great show. Mr. Ruggles, don't you think so? I like it better than any part I ever had. I am interested about it for the sake of the man who wrote it, too. It's his first opera; he's an invalid and has a wife and five kids to look after."

And Ruggles replied, "Oh, gracious! I feel better than ever, having gone ten times, although I wasn't very sore about it before! Ain't you going to eat anything?"

She only picked at her food, drinking what she poured in her glass, and every time she spoke to Dan a look of charming kindness crossed her face, an expression of good fellowship which Ruggles noted with interest.

"I wish you could have seen this same author today at the rehearsal of the play," Letty Lane went on. "He's too ill to walk and they had to carry him in a chair. We all went round to his apartments after the theater. He lives in three rooms with his whole family and he's had so many debts and so much trouble and such a poor contract that he hasn't made much out of "Mandalay," but I guess he will out of this new piece. He hugged and kissed me until I thought he would break my neck."

London had gone mad over Letty Lane, whose traits and contour were the admiration of the world at large and well-known even to the newsboys, and whose likeness was nearly as familiar as that of the Madonnas of old. Her face was oval and perfectly formed, with the reddest of mouths—the most delicious and softest of mouths—the line of her brows clear and straight, and her gray eyes large and as innocent and appealing as a child's; under their long lashes they opened up like flowers. It was said that no man could withstand their appeal; that she had but to look to make a man her slave; and as more than once she turned to Dan, smiling and gracious, Ruggles watched her, mutely thinking of what he had heard this day, for after her letter came accepting their invitation he had taken pains to find out the things he wanted to know. It had not been difficult. As her face and form were public, on every post-card and in every photographer's shop, so the actress' reputation was the property of the public.

As Ruggles repeated these things to himself, he watched her beside the son of his old friend. They were talking—rather she was—and behind the orchids and the ferns her voice was sweet and entrancing. Ruggles tried to appreciate his bill of fare while the two appreciated each other. It was strange to Dan to have her so near and so approachable. His sights of her off the stage had been so slight and fleeting. On the boards she had seemed to be an unreal creation made for the public alone. Her dress, cut fearlessly low, displayed her lovely young bosom—soft, bloomy, white as a shell—and her head and ears were as delicate as the petals of a white rose. Low in the nape of her neck, her golden hair lay lightly, and from its soft masses fragrance came to him. Ruggles could hear her say: "Roach came to the house and told my people that I had a fortune in my voice. I was living with my uncle and my step-uncle and working in the store. And that same day your father sent down a check for five hundred dollars. He said it was for the little girl with the sweet voice," and it gives me a lot of pleasure to think that I began my lessons on that money."

The son of old Dan Blair said earnestly: "I'm darned glad you did—I'm darned glad you did!"

Letty Lane nodded. "So am I. But," with some sharpness, "I've seen why you speak that way. I've earned my way. I made a fortune for Roach all right."

"You mean the man you married?"

"Married—goodness gracious, what made you think that?" She threw back her pretty head and laughed—a laugh with the least possible merriment in it. "Oh, heavens, marry old Job Roach! So they say that, do they? I never heard that. I hear a lot, but I never heard that fairy tale." She put her hands to her cheeks, which had grown crimson. "That's not true!"

Dan swore at himself for his last tactless stupidity.

Ruggles had heard both sides. She was adored by the poor, and as far as rumor knew, she spent thousands on the London papers, and the westerner, who had never been given to reveling in scandals and to whom there was something wicked in speaking ill of a woman, no matter whom she might be, listened with embarrassment to tales he had been told in answer to his other questions; and turned with relief to the stories of Letty Lane's charity, and to the stories of her popularity and her success. They were more agreeable, but they couldn't make him forget the rest, and now as he looked at her face across the bouquet of orchids and ferns, it was with a sinking of heart, a great pity for her, and still a decided enmity. He disapproved of her down to the ground. He didn't let himself think how he felt, but it was for the boy. Ruggles was not a man of the world in any sense; he was simple and Puritan in his judgments, and his gentle nature and his big heart kept him from pharisaical and strenuous measures. He had been led in what he was doing tonight by a diplomacy and a common sense that few men east of the Mississippi would have thought out under the circumstances.

"Tell Mr. Ruggles," he heard Dan say to her, "tell him—tell him!"

And she answered:

"I was telling Mr. Blair that, as he is so frightfully rich, I want him to give me some money."

Ruggles gasped, but answered quietly:

"Well, he's a great giver, Miss Lane."

"I guess he is if he's like his father!" she returned. "I am trying to get a lot, though, out of him, and when you asked me to dine tonight I said to myself, 'I'll accept, for it will be a good time to ask Mr. Blair to help me out in what I want to do.'"

At Ruggles' face she smiled sweetly and said graciously:

"Oh, don't think I wouldn't have come anyway. But I'm awfully tired these days, and going out to supper is just one thing too much to do! I want Mr. Blair," she said, turning to Ruggles as if she knew a word from him would make the thing go through, "to help me build a rest home down on the English coast, for girls who get discouraged in their art. When I think of the luck I have had and how these things have been from the beginning, and how money has just poured in, why," she said ardently, "it just makes my heart ache to think of the girls who try and fail, who go on for a little while and have to give up. You can't tell!" she nodded to Ruggles, as though she were herself a matron of forty—"you can not tell what their temptations are or what comes up to make them go to pieces."

Ruggles listened with interest.

"I haven't thought it all out yet, but so many come to me tired out and discouraged, and I think a nice home taken care of by a good creature like my Higgins, let us say, would be a perfect blessing to them. They could go there and rest and study and just think, and perhaps," she said slowly, as though while she spoke she saw a vision of a tired self, for whom there had been no rest home and no place of retreat, "perhaps a lot of them would pull through in a different way. Now today"—she broke her meditative tone short—"I got a letter from a hospital where a poor thing that used to sing with me in New York was dying with consumption—all gone to pieces and discouraged, and there is where your primroses went to!" she nodded to Dan. "Higgins took them. You don't mind?" And Blair, with a warmth in his voice, touched by her pity more than by her charity, said:

"Why, they grew for you, Miss Lane; I don't care what you do with them."

Letty Lane sank her head on her hands, her elbows leaned on the table. She seemed suddenly to have lost interest even in her topic. She looked around the room indifferently. The orchestra was softly playing "The Dove Song" from "Mandalay," and very softly under her breath the star hummed it, her eyes vaguely fixed on some unknown scene. To Dan and to Ruggles she had grown strange. The music, her brilliancy, her sudden indifference, put her out of their commonplace reach. Ruggles to himself thought with relief:

"She doesn't care one rap for the boy anyway, thank God. She's got other fish to land."

And Dan Blair thought: "It's my infernal money again! But he was generous at heart and glad to be of service to her, and was perfectly willing to be 'touched' for her poor. Then two or three men came up and joined them. She greeted them indolently, bestowing a word or look on this one or on that; all fire and light seemed to have gone out of her, and Dan said:

"You are tired, I guess I had better take you home."

She did not appear to hear him. Indeed she was not looking at him, and Dan saw Prince Poniatowsky making his way toward their table across the room.

Letty Lane rose. Dan put her cloak about her shoulders, and glancing toward Ruggles and toward the boy as indifferently as she had considered the new-comers, who formed a small group around the brilliant figure of the actress, she nodded good night to both Ruggles and Blair and went up to the Hungarian as though he were her husband, who had come to take her home. However, at the door she sufficiently shook off her mood to smile slightly at Dan:

"I have had lots of fun, and the Scotch broth was great! Thank you both so much."

Until they were up in their sitting-room her hosts did not exchange a word. Then Ruggles took a book up from the table and sat down with his cigar. "I am going to read a little Dan. Slept all day; feel as wide-awake as an owl."

Dan showed no desire to be communicative, however, to Ruggles' disappointment, but he exclaimed abruptly:

"I'll be darned, Ruggles, if I can guess what you asked her for!"

"Well, it did turn out to be a pretty expensive party for you, Dannie, didn't it?" Ruggles returned humorously. "I'll let you off from any more supper parties."

And Dan fumed as he turned his back. "Expensive! There you are again, Ruggles, with your infernal intrusion of money into everything I do."

When the older man found himself alone, he read a little and then put his book down to muse. And his meditations were on the tide of life and the beds it runs over; the living whirlpool as Ruggles himself had seen it coursing through London under fog and mist. It seemed now to surge up in the dark to his very windows, and the flow mysteriously passed under his windows in these silent hours over which the waters go. Out of the sound, as it flowed on the cries rose, he thought, kindly to his ears: "God bless her—God bless Letty Lane!" And with this sound he closed his meditations, thinking of a more peaceful stream, the brighter, sweeter waters of the boy's nature, translucent and clear. The vision was happier, and with it Ruggles rose and yawned, and shut his book.

WIRE AND MAIL SERVICE FOR U. S.

Hitchcock Wants Government to Buy Telegraph Lines.

WOULD COST $250,000,000

Postmaster General Will Urge Bill Before Congress to Combine Lines With Postal System.

Washington, Jan. 15.—Acquisition of the telegraph lines of the United States by the government at an approximate cost of $250,000,000, and their operation as a part of the postal service will be recommended to congress in a short time by Postmaster General Hitchcock.

For a year or more Mr. Hitchcock has had this recommendation under consideration. After a thorough study of the operation of government-controlled telegraph systems of foreign countries he has decided to urge the proposition upon congress.

"Should this recommendation be adopted," said Mr. Hitchcock, "I am convinced it will result in important economies and in materially lower telegraph rates than now are exacted. In approximately fifty countries of the world—notably in Great Britain, Germany, France, Austria, Italy, Spain, Russia and Japan—government-controlled telegraphs now are in successful and profitable operation.

"In many of the countries they are operated in connection with the postal service. These telegraphs serve an aggregate population of 950,000,000 and in every instance they have been found to be of immense practical benefit to the people, in both promptitude and cost of the service.

"In this country postoffices are maintained in numerous places not reached by the telegraph systems, and the proposed consolidation, therefore, would afford a favorable opportunity for the wide extension of telegraphic facilities. In many small towns where the telegraph companies have offices the telegraph and mail business could be handled readily by the same employees. It is evident that the separate maintenance of the two services under present conditions results in a needless expense.

"The first telegraph in the United States was operated from 1844 to 1847 by the government, under authority from congress. From many viewpoints it is desirable that government control should be resumed. A method for the acquisition of telegraph lines is prescribed in section 5247 of the revised statutes, which provides that, for postal, military or other purposes, the government may purchase telegraph lines, operated in the United States, at an appraised value.

"Next to the introduction of a general parcels post, for which there is a strong popular demand, the establishment of a government telegraph system office, in my judgment, the best opportunity for the profitable extension of the nation's postal service."

It is not Mr. Hitchcock's purpose to recommend the acquisition of telegraph lines except, possibly, in instances where they are operated as telegraph lines and are an integral part of definite telegraph systems.

The latest census figures available indicate that about 100,000 people are connected with the telegraph companies of the United States. The appraised value of the systems proposed to be acquired would be purely conjectural, but it was said it would approximate $250,000,000. The experts who have figured on the proposition are of the opinion that existing telegraph rates could be reduced at least one-third to the public and yet make the investment in, and operation of, the lines profitable to the government.

Washington, Jan. 15.—Charles W. Morse, convicted New York banker, may not accept the privilege of treatment at Hot Springs, Ark., as a prisoner patient, in accordance with the authority granted to him by President Taft.

It is understood that Morse has declined to leave the army hospital at Fort McPherson, G. A., at this time, possibly because he believed himself physically unequal to the trip to Arkansas.

BIG FIRE LOSSES IN PENNSYLVANIA

Damage of $100,000 in York County.

York, Pa., Jan. 15.—Fires which caused an aggregate loss of $100,000 took place in this city and county, some of the originating from the bursting of pipes and defective flues when heating apparatus was forced in an effort to keep residences warm.

The biggest fire was that which destroyed the T. A. Myers & Co. cigar box factory, the damage being estimated at $85,000.

The firemen were benumbed by the cold and some of them were nearly overcome. They were coated with ice, and a corps of women, directed by Mr. Myers, president of the company, served the firemen with coffee and sandwiches.

At Hanover the Keiterman Wagon works were damaged by flames. There were six chemical calls to private residences and stores.

Firemen Overcome in Fire.

Honesdale, Pa., Jan. 15.—With the green below zero, the Spettigore and Rief buildings were destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of $35,000. Several of the firemen were overcome by the cold. It was necessary to wire Scranton and Carbondale for more hose.

Girl Loses Life in Fire.

Altoona, Pa., Jan. 15.—A fire caused by an overheated flue destroyed the home of a family named Putt, at Clarysburg, and burned to death Edith Putt, an eight-year-old daughter. The mother was in the kitchen and the little girl in bed upstairs when the fire was discovered by neighbors. By this time it was impossible to get upstairs and the mother was prevented from making the attempt. The charred remains were taken from the ruins.

TAFT'S ANTI-TRUST RECORD

Prosecutions Now Number Forty-four, Equalling Mark Roosevelt Set.

Washington, Jan. 15.—President Taft, it was figured at the department of justice, has now equaled the record of President Roosevelt's administrations for trust prosecutions under the Sherman law. The total number is forty-four.

In Mr. Roosevelt's seven years eighteen bills in equity were filed, twenty-five indictments returned and one forfeiture proceeding begun. In a little less than three years of the Taft administration there have been twenty-two civil suits and a like number of indictments.

The Roosevelt record was equaled when there was filed at Macon, Ga., a civil suit against the so-called naval stores trust and indictments were returned against the alleged coaster brake trust at Buffalo, N. Y.
